PREFACE.

THE following sheets, containing the only synonymous vocabulary ever offered to the public, would have possessed superior excellence, and have insured general approbation, if, fortunately, they had been undertaken and executed by that luminary of learning, the late Dr. Samuel Johnson, from whose folio Dictionary of the English language, we are proud to acknowledge, the materials for this arduous undertaking have been purposely selected.

To the philological, critical, and other interesting observations of the above learned author, we have superadded two exclusive advantages to our publication; the one—as a synonymous, the other—as a pronouncing nomenclature. The former is new and unique; the latter is on an approved plan, effected by characteristic types, after the manner of the Royal Standard English Dictionary, published by the author upwards of twenty years since, which has passed through ten editions, each consisting of ten thousand copies.

It is a matter of no small astonishment that a work of this kind, one among the desiderata of literature, should have been so long neglected. Every person accustomed to write, whether on private concerns, or for public instruction, must have felt the want of such an assistant, not only to guard him against the tiresome repetition of the same words, but to enable him to select terms to express his ideas with greater clearness and precision.

The author of the present production felt himself in this predicament about eight years since, when writing, anonymously, An Abridgment of the Historical Account of the Embassy to the Emperour of China,* extracted from the papers of Earl Maccartney, as compiled by that elegant writer, the late Sir George

* Printed for John Stockdale, Piccadilly, embellished with twenty-five Copper Plates, Price 10s. 6d. in Boards.

Staunton, Bart. Secretary to the Embassy. From that moment he determined, and actually began to compile this Synonymous Dictionary. Its progress, however, was slow for the first four years, as he was again called into his Majesty's service; but quitting the Navy at the close of 1801, his whole time has since been occupied in bringing it to that state in which it is now humbly offered for public approbation.

"The rigour of interpretative lexicography," Dr. Johnson observes, "requires that the explanation, and the word to be explained, should be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are seldom exactly synonymous; a new term was not introduced but because the former was thought inadequate: names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then necessary to use the proximate word; for the deficiency of single terms can very seldom be supplied by circumlocution."

In answer to this we by no means contend, that the whole of the explanations collected under such initial words as are printed in large capital letters, which we call RADICALS, are all strictly synonymous; neither, on the other hand, can we agree with those who roundly assert, that there are not two words in the whole English language of precisely the same signification; but this we take upon us to say, that we have no less than Dr. Johnson's authority for their selection and disposition as explanatory of their meaning; and they are such as, in the common acceptation of the word, are deemed synonymous, being all applicable to the radical, notwithstanding each cannot always be substituted for the other with equal force and accuracy of language.

Previous to an explanation of the plan on which the Synonymous words are collected, let it be remembered, that Adverbs, regularly formed from adjectives by the addition of ly, are not synonymised. The reason is obvious; they would have occupied much space to little purpose; and their omission can be supplied, without the least inconvenience, by referring to the radical adjective, and applying the above well-known general rule. The anomalous adverbs, like other terms, have their synonyma duly arranged.

Explanation of the General Plan, and Execution of the Work.

And First, of the SYNONYMA.

1. Words which have their various significations printed uniformly in the same type, contain all their synonyma.

EXAMPLE.

A-bâst', ad. (a sea term, Sax. abaftan behind) in the hinder part, or between the main mast and the stern of a ship, aft.

2. As the insertion of the whole of the synonyma to each word in their alphabetical order would have swelled the book to an enormous size, to prevent this we have adopted the mode of printing one of the explanatory words in SMALL CAPITAL LETTERS, by reference to which as the RADICAL of the synonyma, its various significations will be seen at one view. To render this more plain and intelligible, it will be necessary to attend to the following

EXAMPLE.

Ab-brév-i-â'tion, s. (French) the act of abbreviating; ABRIDGMENT; the means used to abbreviate; words contracted; any mark to contract.

The word ABRIDGMENT being printed in small capitals shews it to be the Radical word, under which every term that signifies Abbreviation or Abridgment is collected. Refer, then, to Abridgment, and you will see it stand as follows.

ABRIDG'MENT, A-bridg'mënt, s. (Fr. abrégement) the epitome of a large work contracted into a small compass, a compend, a compendium, summary, abstract, abbreviation, breviary, brief, breviat, extract, symbol, syllabus; a diminution in general, contraction, reduction; restraint from any thing pleasing, contraction of any thing enjoyed.

If the Reader will take the farther trouble to refer to the words Compend, Compendium, Summary, &c. he will find, under each, three or four of the above synonyma, but especially the word ABRIDGMENT printed in small capitals to notify that, under that word, its various cognate significations are collected.

3. We shall conclude our observations respecting the synonymy, by adducing an example of one word, among many, which has three Radicals, to serve as an elucidation of the rest.

Ma-jēs'tic, Ma-jēs'ti-cāl, a. (from majesty) august, imperial, regal, ROYAL; having dignity, grand, great of appearance; stately, pompous, SPLENDID (Hooker); elevated, lofty, SUBLIME. Dryden.

By having recourse to the words ROYAL, SPLENDID, and SUBLIME, the synonymous interpretations will be found under each respectively.

Secondly, of ETYMOLOGY.

Words, with respect to their etymology, are necessarily divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word is that which can be traced no farther to any English root; thus, circumspect, circumvent, circumstance, delude, concave, and complicate, though compounds in the Latin, are to us primitives. Derivatives are all those which can be referred to any word in English of greater simplicity.

There are five kinds of derivation among words purely English. First, adjectives from substantives; as, nightly from night; weighty from weight;—secondly, substantives from adjectives; as, niceness from nice; muddiness from muddy;—thirdly, adverbs from adjectives; as, mortally from mortal; sinfully from sinful;—fourthly, verbs from adjectives; as, to straighten from straight; to soften from soft;—and, fifthly, participles from verbs; as, placing, placed, from to place.

The two languages from which our primitives have been derived are the Roman and Teutonic. Under the Roman Dr. Johnson has comprehended the French and provincial tongues; and under the Teutonic, comprising most of our words of one syllable, range the Saxon, German, and all their kindred dialects. Most of our polysyllables are Roman, and our words of one syllable are very often Teutonic.

The whole fabric and scheme of the English language is Gothic or Teutonic. It is a dialect of that tongue which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except those where the Slavonian is spoken. Of these languages Dr. Hickes has thus exhibited the genealogy.

GOthic or TEuTONIC,

The only monument that remains of the Gothic, is a copy of the gospels in a somewhat mutilated state, which, from its characters being decorated with silver, is called the silver book. It is now preserved at Upsal; and, having been twice published before, was not long since reprinted at Oxford, under the inspection of Mr. Lye, the editor of Junius. It has been doubted whether the diction of this venerable manuscript be purely Gothic; it seems, however, to exhibit the most ancient dialect now to be found in the Teutonic race; and the Saxon, which is the origin of the present English, was either derived from it, or both have descended from some common parent.

Notices respecting the Derivation of Words.

The etymology and derivation of the words have generally been copied from Dr. Johnson's dictionary, in the execution of which it has been deemed proper to give the modern in lieu of the ancient orthography to such as are of French original. In some other cases, where that learned author has quoted etymologies from three or four different languages, we have adopted sometimes but two, and occasionally but one; especially when this seemed to us not only sufficient for the purpose, but the most pertinent and satisfactory.

As even the smallest deviation from our archetype merits explanation, it is necessary to remark, that many words appear without having their derivations noticed, only because they are self-evident. Such are words beginning with the privative or negative particles in and un;—likewise compound words, which do not require the repetition of their simple terms to be, in this respect, understood.

Lastly, many derivatives stand without etymology or reference to their primitives, because these generally appear in the line above. For example, abashment and abatement are deduced from abash and abate, their respective primitives and preceding words; and who does not see that backwardness comes from backward, and barbarousness from barbarous, notwithstanding the adverbs backwardly and barbarously separate the derivative from the primitive?

Having given such explanations as will enable the reader to comprehend the plan and execution of the two first parts of the title of this work, namely, the Synonymous and the Etymological, our next business is to elucidate, in the same manner, the third and last part, which embraces the pronunciation of the words.

The mode we have adopted for this purpose has already been marked with public approbation. The words are not only rationally divided into syllables, accurately accented, and their part of speech properly distinguished, but likewise, the various sounds of the vowels and consonants are denoted by typographical characters, and illustrated by examples in the following KEY, by which their true pronunciation is clearly shewn according to the present practice of men of letters, eminent orators, and polite speakers in the metropolis.

KEY

To the Synonymous, Etymological, and Pronouncing English Dictionary, exemplifying the Characters made use of to point out the Pronunciation.

I. THE DIFFERENT SOUNDS OF THE VOWELS.

	1	2	3	4	5	6
A.	hâte	hât	hâll' wâsh'	bâre	pârt	li-âr
E.	mête	mêt	thêre	thèy	hér
I.	pîne	pîn	marîne	shîrt
O.	nôte	nôt' fôft'	prôve	wôlf	dône
U.	dûke	dûck	bûsh	W. neŵ nôŵ
Y.	trÿ	ÿ or y lovely	ÿ like ü hÿrst
OI & OY.		bôil	bôÿ
OU & OW.		ôû	ôŵ

Vowels not sounded will be printed in Italics; as, Lâ'bour, prêach, bear, hêad, dèign.

Indistinct sounds of vowels will be in Italics; as, Â'ble, pâr'son, fât'ten.

Flat and slowly accented syllables will have the Grave accent ('): as, Bôr'dér, warn'ing, cêl'ing, cê'ruse, îcî-cle.

Sharp and quickly accented syllables will have the Acute accent ('): as, Bôr'rôw, wâsh'ing, hêif'ér, bêt'ter, id'i-ôm.

Note—a, i, o, and u, without any of the above characters, either alone, or before or after a consonant, have a shorter sound than â, î, ô, and û, though of the same quality, in the same proportion as a in wasb, is to a in ball: or, o in not, to o in soft.

The vowel e will be frequently seen without any character over it, in which case it has the exact sound of î; as in the words tick'en, fêret, en'glîsh, &c. &c.

II. THE DIFFERENT SOUNDS OF THE CONSONANTS.

	ch like tch.	ch like k.	ch like sh.
CH.	cheese , charm	character , chasm .	chaise , chevalier .
S.	s hissing sound.		s soft like z.
X.	x sharp like ks.		x flat like gz.
G.	g soft sound.		g hard sound.
GH.	gh like f.		gh silent or mute.
PH.	ph like f.		ph silent or mute.
H.	h mute.		h aspirat.
TH.	th hard sound.		th soft sound.

* G always sounds hard before a, o, and u.
+ The only two words in which ph are mute.

CONSONANTS, when printed in Italics, are not to be sounded; as, borrow, condemn, dumb, whole; — except CH when, initially, they have the sound of sh, as in chaise, chevalier, as above.

DIRECTIONS FOR THE COMBINED SOUNDS OF CERTAIN SYLLABLES.

fi-tion	sound	fîsh-shûn	bi-tious	sound	bîsh-shûs	sion	sound	zhûn

Words differently pronounced by our best orators, either with regard to the sound of the vowels, or to the placing of the accent, are particularly noticed; in which cases it may not be improper to observe, our opinion inclines generally to the first mode.

Although we have omitted the final k after c in words derived from the French, and the learned languages, as music, critic, arithmetic, &c. in conformity to modern custom and the originals, yet the deficiency can be supplied by those who prefer such orthography.—This innovation, however, is more tolerable than that of exterminating the letter u from favor, and a long list of et cæteras.

We have designedly excluded from our nomenclature words which have relation to proper names; such as Arian, Socinian, Calvinist, Benedictine; but have retained those of a more general nature; as Heathen, Pagan.

No inconsiderable number of the terms of art have been admitted; and we have also, in compliance with custom, inserted such French and other foreign words as are usually met with in English authors, and which claim, from long intercourse, the right of naturalization.

Following the steps of our learned guide, we have registered obsolete words when they are found in authors not obsolete; or when they have any force or beauty which may merit revival. To these are prefixed the obelisk (†) according to general usage.

Verbal nouns in ing * are purposely omitted, or placed only to illustrate the sense of the verb; except when they signify things as well as actions, and have in this case a plural number; as covering, dwelling, living;—or when they have an absolute and abstract signification; as colouring, painting, learning.

The present participles are likewise generally neglected, unless, by signifying rather habit or quality than action, they take the nature of adjectives; as, a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pacing horse, a horse that can pace; a moving speech, a speech adapted to affect the passions. But even these are not always inserted, because they can be understood without danger of mistake by consulting the verb.

* Present participles to become verbal nouns must have the definite article the before them, and the preposition of after them; as, the keeping of the castle, the leading of the army. See Rule VII. of the Syntax.

Such, however, of the past or passive particles that govern a preposition after them, and even those which do not, but partake of the nature of adjectives and betoken habit or quality, are all placed in alphabetic order, under the discriminative characteristic of participial adjectives.

EXAMPLES.

Ād-mīr'ēd, p. a. wondered at; esteemed; with by.

Trāns-fūs'ēd, p. a. poured out; with on: as, transfused on thee his ample spirit rests. Milton.

Āb-strāct'ēd, p. a. separated, disjoined; refined, PURIFIED; abstruse, DIFFICULT; absent of mind, inattentive to present objects.

The construction of the preposition with active and neuter verbs, as well as with substantives and adjectives, is scrupulously observed throughout the whole work, from which, for explanation, we have selected the following

EXAMPLES.

Ād-jūst', v. a. (Fr. ajuster) to regulate, to rectify, to set right, to put in order, to settle in the right form; to reduce, to reduce to the true state or standard; to make conformable; with to before the thing to which the conformity is made.

Ād-vīz', v. a. (Fr. avis advise) to counsel; with to before the thing told;—to inform, to give information, to make acquainted with any thing; with, often, of before the thing told.

Ād-vīz', v. n. to counsel; with with before the person.

Cōv'e-nānt, v. n. (Fr. covenant) to CONTRACT, bargain, stipulate, agree with another on certain terms; with with before the person, and for before the price or thing purchased.

Stārve, v. n. (Sax. stearfan) to perish with hunger, to famish; to be killed with cold; with with or for before the cause;—to suffer extreme poverty; to be destroyed with cold.

Prōūd, a. (Sax. prude) too much pleased with himself; elated, conceited, valuing himself; with of before the object;—arrogant, haughty, supercilious, lordly, highminded, &c. &c. &c.

Skīl'fūl, a. knowing, skilled, adept, learned, well-instructed, intelligent, qualified with skill, possessing any art, adroit, dexterous, able; with of, at, and in: of seems poetical, at ludicrous, in popular and proper.

There is another kind of composition which, Dr. Johnson observes, is more frequent in our language than, perhaps, any other, from which arises to foreigners the greatest difficulties.

“ We modify the signification of many words by a particle subjoined ; as, to come off, to escape by a fetch ; to fall on, to attack ; to fall off, to apostatize ; to break off, to stop abruptly ; to bear out, to justify ; to fall in, to comply ; to give over, to cease ; to set off, to embellish ; to set in, to begin a continual tenour ; to set out, to begin a course or journey ; to take off, to copy ; with innumerable expressions of the same kind, of which some appear wildly irregular, being so far distant from the sense of the simple words, that no sagacity will be able to trace the steps by which they arrived at the present use. These I have noted with great care ; and though I cannot flatter myself that the collection is complete, I believe I have so far assisted the students of our language, that this kind of phraseology will be no longer insuperable ; and the combinations of verbs and participles, by chance omitted, will be easily explained by comparison with those that may be found.”

Notices of ERRONEOUS ORTHOGRAPHY.

The orthography of a language ought not to be disturbed or changed on narrow views. Whatever alterations may be attempted should have better support than caprice, which is apt to wanton without control, or vanity, which seeks praise in petty reformation. Actuated by neither, we shall take the liberty of exposing an erroneous mode of spelling certain classes of words, contrary to analogy, and the principles of our language.

1. With respect to doubling the final consonant of certain verbs.

We shall premise our observations by quoting the following established, and well-known

GENERAL RULE.

Verbs of one syllable ending with a single consonant, preceded by a single vowel, and those of two or more syllables which have their accent upon the LAST syllable, double the final consonant of the verb in the present participle, and in every other part of the verb to which a syllable is added: as, shut, shut'ting, shut'teth; beset', beset'ting, beset'teth; forbid', forbid'ding, forbid'deth.

We would now ask what stronger evidence can be adduced to prove the erroneoufness of doubling the final consonant, in cases stated as above, of words consisting of two or more syllables, whose accent is upon the FIRST syllable. Thus, from the verb to quar'el, we have analogically written quar'reling, quar'releth, and the substantive quar'reler; from to vic'tual, — vic'tualing, vic'tualeth, and the noun vic'tualer; from to wor'ship, — wor'shiping, wor'shipeth, worshiper; and from the substantive jew'el we write, by analogy, jew'eler. Instead of the above correct spelling of the words, all our * lexicographers have erroneously spelt them with ll; as, quarrelling, quarreller; viçtualing, viçtualer; worshipping, worshipper, and jeweller.

2. With respect to the formation of the plural of two classes of Nouns.

RULE I.

All Nouns of the singular number ending with y preceded by a consonant, change the y into ies to form their plural; which general rule, as well as the one that follows, is without exception.

EXAMPLES.

Singular,	{	Vacancy,	Plural,	{	Vacancies.
		Territory,			Territories.
		Inaccuracy,			Inaccuracies.
		Excellency,			Excellencies.

RULE 2.

Nouns of the singular number ending in ey require the addition of s only for the formation of their plural.

* Except Dr. Ash, who has given the correct orthography to two words only of this numerous class, namely, viçtualed, and viçtualing; but spells viçtualler, and all the rest with ll.

EXAMPLES.

Singular,	{	Attorney,	Plural,	{	Attorneys.
		Chimney,			Chimneys.
		Jockey,			Jockeys.
		Kidney,			Kidneys.

Words of this class, especially the four above mentioned, are often erroneously written attornies, chimnies, jockies, kidnies.

RULE 3.

Nouns of the singular number compounded of a substantive and an adjective, form their plural by adding s to the substantive part of the word.

EXAMPLES.

Singular,	{	Handful,	Plural,	{	Handsful.
		Mouthful,			Mouthsful.
		Spoonful,			Spoonsful.
		Court martial,			Courts martial.

Notices of ACCENT.

Besides that the generality of our lexicographers plead for unity of accent, they use the acute accent only, and place it indiscriminately over long and short syllables, affirming, absurdly and fallaciously, that it always makes that syllable long over which it is placed. As this mode of accentuation is contrary to oral language, and tends to annihilate the harmony of verse, which consists in the pleasing variety of long and short, of accented and unaccented syllables, we have adopted both the grave and acute accents, affixing the former to long or flat, and slowly accented syllables, and the latter to short or sharp, and quickly accented, as will be seen by referring to the KEY.

For our part, we coincide with those who are advocates for plurality of accent, without which it is impossible to pronounce distinctly or properly some thousand words in our language, as will be clearly demonstrated by the following observations.

It is agreed that the general use of accent is to distinguish the most significant syllable by a greater stress of voice: yet even this is not always proper, nor constantly observed; for there are many compound words of two syllables which require both to be pronounced with an equal force of voice; or, in other words, which have no accent.

If, then, accent perform the same office on syllables as emphasis does on words; and if the principal aim of both be, to convey the most significant and important part of words and sentences, (the former of which lies in the radical syllables) I would ask, who can, or who does, pronounce the words disapprove, immature, intervene, overflow, &c. &c. without placing an accent upon the first and last syllables?—Nay, I ask farther, if it is not the height of absurdity to prefer a syllable that is merely formal or expletive (by giving it a stronger accent) to that which constitutes its very essence, its signification.

With regard to words of polysyllables, requiring often two, and frequently three accents, it sometimes happens that one of the accented syllables is pronounced stronger than the rest, and this most frequently falls to the grave accent. The strength of this syllable, however, is often dependant on, and determined by, the number of accents in such words; for, in all cases there must be a distinguishing stress of voice on the radical parts of compound words, otherwise the speaker would ill deserve the name of orator.

In support of this doctrine we would again ask the advocates for unity of accent, whether they can pronounce the words historiography, inseparability, naturalization, prognostication, superiority, &c. &c. with a single accent? For, till we hear these and such others distinctly and properly pronounced by a single emphatic stress of voice on any one syllable, we shall adhere to our opinion, as well as oral practice of a plurality of accent.

To enable our readers to ascertain the number of accents proper to each word of more than two syllables, as practised by public speakers, notwithstanding they are not so marked in this, nor in any other English Dictionary, let them observe the following

GENERAL RULE.

Reduce all words of polysyllables to their radical parts, and as many roots or parts as there are contained in them, so many accents will each word require. For example: the word edification will be found accented on the fourth syllable only, that of its radical edify on the first; therefore edification is entitled to, and is actually always pronounced with, two accents, an acute and a grave, as ed'ificàtion. Moreover, although the words irresistibility, interlineation, &c. &c. stand with only one accent affixed, yet on the same principle, and by the same rule, each, in oral language, is entitled to three; namely, ir'resist'ibil'ity, in'terlin'eàtion. To this general rule there is but one

EXCEPTION.

Derivatives formed from primitives of two syllables, which are accented on the last, change the radical accent from the last to the first syllable. Thus, abjuration, admiration, affirmation, whose primitives or radicals are abjure', admire', affirm', require the accents on the first and third syllables; as, ab'juràtion, ad'miràtion, af'firmàtion. This change of accent from their primitives is made for reasons of euphony, which sometimes interferes and claims precedence of general rules.

Having noticed whatever is necessary for the information of the reader, we shall only add, that the best of our narrow and confined abilities are incorporated with the beauties and excellences of a work that has stood the test of criticism,—a work which, with the memory of its author, will be handed down to, and admired and venerated by, the latest posterity. That there are some omissions in the synonyma we are free to confess; but the words which we have thus discovered when too late for insertion under their proper heads, are very few,—too inconsiderable to merit even a place in the Appendix. On the other hand, be it known, that we have detected many errors in Johnson's which are corrected in our own lexicon; and have added, to his collection, a number of words from such respectable authorities as claimed admission into our extensive synonymous Vocabulary.

Finally, the author now commits his labours with diffidence and respect to the tribunal of a generous and discerning public, conscious of meeting with the same candour and impartiality experienced in his former publications; and cherishing the fond, but trembling hope, that the verdict to be pronounced may ultimately prove as beneficial to the proprietors, as flattering to the writer, whose principal aim has been to render it worthy of public patronage.

A GRAMMAR

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

GRAMMAR is the art of expressing our ideas according to certain established rules: it is divided into four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.

Orthography teaches how words ought to be written, the true pronunciation of which is called orthoepy.

Etymology teaches the true derivation of a word from its primitive or original.

Syntax teaches the due construction of words into sentences: and Prosody, the quantity and accent of syllables.

PART I.

OF ORTHOGRAPHY, OR TRUE SPELLING.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art or practice of spelling words whereby we express our thoughts in writing; for which purpose certain letters or characters have been formed, denoting distinct or inarticulate sounds; and the complete set of letters in any language is called the Alphabet, which in the English tongue contains twenty-six, whose names and powers are as follow:

THE ALPHABET.

Roman.	Italic.	Old English.	Name.
A a	A a	A a	ay
B b	B b	B b	bce
C c	C c	C c	cee
D d	D d	D d	dee
E e	E e	E e	e (ee)
F f	F f	F f	eff
G g	G g	G g	jee

VOWELS—a, e, i, o, u, w, y.

OF VOWELS.

A vowel is a letter which can be sounded fully and distinctly by itself, whereof there are seven in the English language, viz. a, e, i, o, u, w, and y; for the various sounds of which the reader is requested to refer to the Key inserted in the preface.

OF DOUBLE VOWELS, DIPHTHONGS, AND TRIPHTHONGS.

A diphthong is the meeting of two vowels in one syllable; and a triphthong is the junction of three. If the sound of one of the vowels only be heard, the diphthong or triphthong is called improper; but, in either,—if the vowels composing them make a distinct articulation, composed of two different qualities, such diphthong or triphthong is then termed a proper one.

There are twenty-five diphthongs, viz. ai, ao, au, aw, ay; ea, ee, ei, eo, eu, ew, ey; ie; oa, oe, oi, oo, ou, ow, oy; ua, ue, ui, uo, and uy; and nine triphthongs, eau, eye, ieu, iew, uai, uea, uee, uoi, and uoy,—the various sounds and qualities of which, as well as of the consonants, are accurately analyzed and pointed out in my “New French and English Pronouncing Dictionary.”

OF THE CONSONANTS.

A Consonant is a letter that cannot be sounded, or but imperfectly sounded, without the aid of a vowel; as b, whose sound is be by annexing the vowel e.

The following consonants are called mutes, b, c, d, g, k, t, and q:—b is termed aspirate; c, s, and z, sibilant; and l, m, n, and r, liquids; which consonants are again subdivided into labial, dental, palatine, and nasal.

OF THE VARIOUS SOUNDS OR POWERS OF THE CONSONANTS.

B has one invariable sound. It is the soft articulation of p, being pronounced less forcibly.

C sounds hard like k before a, o, u, l, and r,—and soft before e, i, and y, or an apostrophe.

Ch have three different sounds;—1st. like tch, as in church, crutch, &c.—2dly like sh in words derived from the French; as chaise, chevalier: and 3dly like k in words derived from the Greek; as chord, chymist, archangel.

D has but one uniform sound; as in draw, dwell.

F (the hard sound of v) has also one invariable sound.

G has always the hard sound before a, o, u, l, r, and at the end of words unless followed by d or e; and is sometimes hard, sometimes soft, before e, i, and y.

G before n is mute, but gives the preceding vowel the long sound, as in sign, condign. It is sounded, by the best orators, at the end of words, as loving, speaking, writing, &c.

Gh at the end of some words sound like f; as in cough, laugh, tough, rough, enough, trough: in most other words gh are silent, and give the preceding vowel the long sound; as although, high, thigh.

Pb always sound like f, except in phthisic, phthisical, phthisis, in which words they are silent.

H, according to the definition of most grammarians, is neither a consonant nor a vowel. It is, however, a consonant, and does the office of one by giving form to a succeeding vowel. Its power is shewn by a strong emission of the breath, as in the following words; hand, horse, &c.: nevertheless, this consonant is sometimes mute in the beginning, middle, and end of words; as in honesty, rhetoric, Messiah.

J is sounded like g soft.

K has the hard sound of c, and is never doubled.

L is doubled at the end of monosyllables; as in hill, kill, skill, fall, ball; but in compound words one of the l's is suppressed, as in skillful. It is mute in some words, as in calf, half, could, would, should, balk, talk, walk, &c.

M has but one uniform sound.

N has always the same sound. It is mute after an m at the end of a word; as damn, hymn, condemn, contemn.

P has one invariable sound. See B.

Q, always followed by u, sounds like k; as in conquer, liquor, &c.

Re, at the end of words derived from the French, are pronounced like er; as in theatre, metre, sepulchre, &c.

S has a hard and a soft sound. Its natural one, the hard, is hissing or sibilant, as in sister; its soft is like z, as in bees, &c.

S retains the soft sound in the syllable sion, if a vowel precede it, as in confusion, elision, &c.; but preserves the hissing sound, when preceded by a consonant; as in conversion, diversion, &c. Before e mute it sounds like z, as in devise, revise; and also before y at the end of words, as in busy, daisy, &c. But, note, ss always retain the hard or hissing sound.

V is the soft sound, or rather power, of f.

W is sometimes a vowel, and sometimes a consonant. It is a consonant in these words, wool, wolf, &c. otherwise they would be pronounced ool, oolf, which pronunciation every one must allow is improper.—It is a vowel in the words new, blew, and sounds like u long.—As a corroborating proof that w is a consonant, and that its power or sound is not that of oo, (as Mr. Sheridan contends) we need only instance the word one, which is pronounced by every Englishman as if written won. The articulation of w consonant requires a closer contact of the lips, and a quicker and more forcible emission of the breath than oo does, its pretended power,—in the same proportion as h aspirated is to h mute.

X has two sounds, sharp and flat: sharp like ks, as in extreme; and flat like gz, as in exile. Note, its power is z at the beginning of words.

Y, (the best name for which would be ye) is likewise sometimes a vowel, and sometimes a consonant. It is a consonant in the beginning of words, as in ye, yes, yet, yest, year, yard, yore, &c.; and a vowel in the middle or at the end of words.—Even the vowels i and e frequently take the sound of y consonant; as in the words soldier, righteous, &c. &c. which are pronounced as if written soldyur, rightyus.

Z has but one sound, which is nearly that of ds.

OF SYLLABLES.

By a Syllable is meant a single articulation, or as much of a word as can be uttered by one impulse of the voice. Syllables, in speaking, are sounds of which words are formed; and in writing they are parts of the same word, composed of characters which represent those sounds: for instance, the word syllable itself (syl-la-ble) has three parts, three sounds, and three syllables.

A GENERAL RULE FOR THE DIVISION OF SYLLABLES.

1. A consonant between two vowels, must be joined to the former to make the first syllable; as, bal-ance, ev-i-dent, ac-cip-i-ent.
2. A double consonant must be divided, as din-ner, sup-per, &c.
3. When two vowels come together, both distinctly sounded, they must be separated in spelling; as co-e-qual, mu-tu-al, &c.
4. Grammatical terminations, or endings, must be separated in spelling; as lov-ed, walk-edst, mov-ing, per-se-ver-ance.
5. Consonants not proper to begin a word must be divided; as log-man, lob-ster, lock-ram.
6. Consonants, which may begin a word, are to be divided, whenever their separation conveys the sound of each syllable of the word the nearest to true orthoepy; as rep-ro-bate, ret-ro-grade, sec-re-ta-ry.
7. All compounds and derivatives, generally speaking, must be divided into their single or primitive words, as mor-al, * mor-al-i-ty; guilt, guilt-i-ness, guilt-y.

* This rule is liable to exception: for example, if morality (from moral) be divided mo-ral-i-ty, instead of mor-al-i-ty, it agrees best with the standard pronunciation.

8. The endings, cial, tial; cious, tious; seous, sion, &c. &c. sounded shal, shus, shun, &c. are seldom to be separated, as they rarely form but one syllable.

PART II.

OF ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the true derivation of a word from its original—shews the parts of speech—the inflections of nouns, and the various modifications by which the sense of the word is diversified.

A primitive word is a word underived from any other language.

A derivative word is that which comes from some other in the same language, or from one in another language.

A simple word is that which is not mixed or compounded.

A compound word is one that is made up of two or more words.

There are five sorts of derivations among words purely English: 1st. adjectives from substantives; as nightly from night:—2dly, substantives from adjectives; as niceness from nice; delicateness from delicate; muddiness from muddy:—3dly, adverbs from adjectives, by the addition of ly; as mortally from mortal; sinfully from sinful, &c.—4thly, verbs from adjectives; as to straighten from straight; to soften from soft, &c.—and 5thly, participles from verbs, by adding ing or ed, or ng and d only if the verb end in e; as, walking, walked, from to walk; and placing, placed, from to place.

OF WORDS.

Words are divided into classes called parts of speech, of which there are ten different kinds, viz. Article, Noun, Adjective, Pronoun, Verb, Participle, Adverb, Conjunction, Preposition, Interjection.

1. The article is a word prefixed to substantives to point out their signification.

2. A noun or substantive is the name of any person, place, thing, or abstract quality.

3. An adjective is a word that denotes some quality or accident belonging to the substantive.

4. A pronoun is put in the place of a noun, to point out some person or thing.

5. A verb expresses action, being, or suffering.

6. A participle is a part of speech which partakes both of the nature of a verb and an adjective.

7. An adverb is joined to a verb to denote the circumstance of a quality or action.

8. A conjunction joins words and sentences together.

9. A preposition is put before nouns and pronouns to express the relation or connection between different words.

10. An interjection expresses some sudden emotion of the mind.

OF THE ARTICLE.

The Article is a word prefixed to substantives to limit or extend their signification.

There are three articles, a, an, and the; the two first are called indefinite articles, and the latter the definite.

A and an, indefinite articles, used before substantives of the singular number only, leave the sense of the word to which they are prefixed, in a vague or undetermined sense; as, a house, means any house or one house; an index, means one index, or any index: but note, an is used before such nouns only of the singular as begin with a vowel or h mute; as an hour.

* The indefinite article a is joined to the words dozen, score, groce, &c.; as a score of sheep, a groce of buttons, &c. &c.

The *, the definite article, used both in the singular and plural number, points out the particular person, place, or thing, spoken of; as, "the rule I gave you is invariable,"—that is, that particular rule. When substantives are without any article, they are to be taken in their widest, or most unlimited sense; as, "man is mortal,"—that is,—all mankind are mortal.

OF THE SUBSTANTIVE NOUN.

A Noun or Substantive is the name of any person, place, thing, or abstract quality; as William, London, a book, virtue.

Substantives † are of two sorts, proper and common names.

Common names (called, also, appellative) are such as express a whole kind, as, man, animal, bird, fish.

Proper names express a particular person, place, or thing, so as to distinguish them from all others; as William, London.

OF NUMBER.

By Number we mean the distinction of one from many.

A noun has two numbers, the singular and plural.

The singular number expresses one person or thing; as a book, a house; or a number collectively taken; as, a committee, an army.

The plural expresses more than one, as books, houses. It is generally formed from the singular by the addition of s.

Nouns ending in ch, sh, ss, or x, form their plural by adding es; as church, churches; blush, blushes; kiss, kisses; box, boxes. Those in f or fe ‡ are changed into ves; as calf, calves; half, halves; knife, knives; leaf, leaves; loaf, loaves; sheaf, sheaves; shelf, shelves; self, selves; thief, thieves; wife, wives; wolf, wolves.

Nouns ending in y, preceded by a consonant, form their plural by changing y into ies; as glory, glories, &c.—But when y is preceded by a vowel, the plural is formed according to the general rule; as joy, joys; delay, delays; attorney, attorneys; kidney, kidneys; not attornies, and kidnies, as many erroneously write.

THE FOLLOWING NOUNS FORM THEIR PLURAL IRREGULARLY.

Singular.	Plural.	Singular.	Plural.	Singular.	Plural.	Singular.	Plural.
Brother,	Brethren,	Die	Dice	Louse	Lice	Penny	Pence
or Brothers		Foot	Feet	Mouse	Mice	Tooth	Teeth
Child,	Children	Goose	Geese	Man	Men	Woman	Women

OF GENDER.

Gender, which is the distinction of sexes, is of three kinds; masculine, feminine, and neuter.

Nouns which relate to males, are of the masculine gender; as man, boy, bull.

Those which signify females, are of the feminine; as woman, girl, cow: and

Such as express things without life, are neuter; that is, of neither masculine nor feminine gender; as pen, paper, desk.

OF CASES.

Cases are the variations or endings of nouns, serving to express the different relations they bear to each other, and to the things which they represent.

* The definite article, the, is sometimes applied to adverbs, and to adjectives of the comparative and superlative degrees, in order to render them the more nervous and precise; as the more danger, the more honour; this is the least of all.

† All nouns to which one cannot add the word thing, with propriety, are substantives;—and those to which thing may be added are adjectives.

‡ Except "hoof, roof, chief, dwarf, grief, handkerchief, relief, scarf, wharf, reproof, strife, scold, stuff," and others in ff, which form their plural by the addition of s.

English substantives have properly but two * cases; but reasons are subjoined in a note below for adding or supposing a third; and these three cases are called the nominative, possessive, and objective.

The nominative expresses simply the name of a person, place, or thing, and is put before a verb, in a simple affirmation; as, man, London, virtue, he is; but when a question is asked, the nominative is placed after the verb; as, is he?

The possessive denotes property or belonging to; as man's glory; which may also be expressed by a circumlocution, with the preposition of; as "the glory of man."

The objective is placed after verbs, shewing that the action of the agent or nominative, placed before the verb, passes to the noun or word after it, as its object; as, I esteem Thomas. *

EXAMPLES OF NOUNS DECLINED ACCORDING TO GENDER, NUMBER, CASE, AND ARTICLE.

	Singular.	Plural.
Masc.	Nomin. Man, a man, the man	Nomin. Men, men, the men
	Possess. Man's, a man's †, the man's	Possess. Men's †, men's, the men's
	Object. Man, a man, the man	Object. Men, men, the men
Femin.	Nomin. A queen, the queen	Nomin. Queens, the queens
	Possess. A queen's †, the queen's	Possess. Queens' †, the queens'
	Object. A queen, the queen	Object. Queens, the queens
Neut.	Nomin. Liberty	Nomin. Liberties, or the liberties
	Possess. Liberty's †	Possess. Of liberties, or, of the liberties
	Object. Liberty	Object. Liberties, or the liberties

Some nouns are used only in the singular number; as, barley, wheat, learning, pride, gold, silver. Others are the same in the singular and plural; as, deer, fern, swine, sheep.

Some in the plural only; as, annals, Alps, arms, ashes, bellows, bowels, breeches, cresses, dregs, goods, entrails, ides, lungs, scissors, shears, snuffers, thanks, wages, news.

The names of cities, countries, rivers, mountains; the names of virtues and vices; the names of herbs, (excepting nettle, poppy, lily, colewort, cabbage, &c.) bread, wine, beer, ale, honey, oil, milk, butter, want the plural: but when some of these stand for individual, or several sorts, they then admit of a plural; as, wines, oils.

1st, The SEX is distinguished by different Words.

Male.	Female.	Male.	Female.	Male.	Female.
bachelor	maid	friar	nun	moor	morisco
boar	sow	gander	goose	nephew	niece
boy	girl	grandfather	grandmother	ram	ewe
bridegroom	bride			singer	songstress
brother	sister	hero	heroine	son	daughter
buck	doe	horse	mare	sultan	sultana
bull	cow	man	wife	stag	hind
cock	hen	king	queen	steer	heifer

drake	duck	landgrave	landgravine	widower	widow drone	bee	lord	lady	whore-	whore, or earl	countess	man	woman	monger	strumpet
father	mother	master	dame

* With propriety may the objective case (answering to the accusative in Latin) be allowed, if we attend to the above sentence; for instead of "I esteem Thomas," let us supply its place with the personal pronoun, and then the phrase will be "I esteem him," where him is in the objective case, as may be seen by the declension of pronouns.

† Or by a circumlocution with the preposition of; as of a man, of the man; of men, of the men;—of a queen, of the queen;—of queens, of the queens.

2dly, Some nouns distinguish their feminine by ending in ess.

Male.	Female.	Male.	Female.	Male.	Female.
abbot	abbess	elector	electress	prince	princess
actor	actress	emperour	empress	prior	prioress

cock sparrow	hen sparrow	man-servant	maid-servant
a country man	a country woman, or girl	male child	female child
a godson	a goddaughter	a boar pig	a sow pig

Lastly, in ix: as, administrator, administratrix; consecrator, consecratrix; executor, executrix; testator, testatrix, &c.

OF THE ADJECTIVE.

An * Adjective is a word which denotes some quality or accident belonging to the substantive; as, a new book; a large house.

Adjectives are never varied on account of number, gender, or case; the only variation they are subject to is—that of degrees of comparison.

OF THE COMPARISON OF ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives have three † states or degrees ‡ of comparison; the positive, the comparative, and the superlative.

The positive simply expresses the quality; as, this paper is white.

The comparative enlarges or decreases the quality of the thing; as, this paper is whiter than that.

The superlative expresses its quality in the highest possible degree; as, this paper is the whitest of all.

OF THE FORMATION OF THE DEGREES OF COMPARISON.

The comparative is formed from the positive by adding er; the superlative by adding est; except when the word ends in e,—for in this case r only is to be added for the comparative, and st for the superlative; as,

Ex. 1.	Pos.	Comp.	Superl.	Ex. 2.	Pos.	Comp.	Superl.
	long	longer	longest		wise	wiser	wisest
	thick	thicker	thickest		polite	politer	politest

* In order to know whether a word be an adjective or a substantive, add the word thing to it: if it make good sense it is an adjective; if nonsense, the word is a substantive.

† Some few adjectives are used only in the positive state or degree; as, living, dead, &c.

‡ Certain critics in philology deny the existence of three degrees of comparison, though they admit, at the same time, of three states. In support of this, they say long is the positive state of the adjective. We admit this, and then ask whether longer and longest are not the comparative and superlative states?—Thus, by changing terms, they will be found to have three degrees of comparison.

The above rule holds good for words of two syllables, whose accent is on the last, and some few, as able, noble, &c. accented on the first syllable :—but words of more than two syllables, and those of two which end in l, form their comparative and superlative by prefixing more and most to the positive ; as, excellent, more excellent, most excellent ; frugal, more frugal, most frugal, &c.

The superlative is formed in a few adjectives, by adding the adverbs more and most to the end of them ; as, foremost, nethermost, undermost, uttermost, or utmost, uppermost.

The following are irregularly formed in most languages :

Pos.	Comp.	Sup.	Pos.	Comp.	Sup.
Good	better	best	Little	less	least
Bad, ill, evil	worse	worst	Much or many	more	most

Note. Double comparatives and superlatives are grammatical errors, and should not be used ; such as, more braver, worsen, the most worst, &c. There are advocates, however, in support of this inaccuracy, who contend, that most highest, which occurs in the Psalms, is rather a beauty than a blemish in the language, as being a distinguishing compliment justly due to the Almighty.

OF THE PRONOUN.

A Pronoun is a word put instead of a noun.

Pronouns have persons, numbers, genders, and cases. They are divided into six kinds, viz. Personal or Substantive, Relative, Demonstrative, Interrogative, Indefinite, and Adjective.

The personal or substantive pronouns are the five following ; I, thou, he, she, it.

I, which is of the first person, is used when one speaks of himself ; thou, the second, when he speaks to another ; he, she, or it, (all of the third) when an absent man, woman, or thing is spoken of ; the plural of which are we, ye, they.

Relative pronouns are four in number ; who, which, what, that. Who, used in speaking of persons, is both masculine and feminine : we make use of which, in speaking of things ; it is therefore neuter.

What, applied to things only, includes both the relative and the antecedent ; that is used by many writers, equally to persons and things.

Demonstrative pronouns are two in number ; this, that. We make use of the word this in speaking of, or referring to, the person or thing that is near us—its plural is these ; and of that, when speaking of such as are at a distance, the plural of which is those ; as, this is the man ; these are the books ; that is the ship ; those are the men.

Interrogative pronouns used, as their name imports, in asking questions, are three ; who, which, what.

Indefinite pronouns express nothing distinct and determined ; they are eight in number, some, any, whoever, one, other*, who†, which†, what†.*

The adjective pronouns are thy, my, his, her, its, our, your, their, which are always followed by a noun substantive.

Own and self (in the plural selves) are annexed to the above adjective pronouns, to mark their meaning more strongly ; as, I did it my own self||.

In a poetical style, inanimate things are personified, and, of course, accompanied with the masculine or feminine pronouns he or she, his or her ;—as,

“ Soon as the light of dawning science spread
“ Her orient ray, and wak'd the muses' song, &c.”

* The possessive of one, is one's ; of other, other's ; the nominative plural of which is others, and possessive others'.

† The three indefinite pronouns, who, which, what, may easily be discriminated from relative pronouns, as there will be no antecedent in the sentence to which they can refer ; and also from interrogative pronouns, as no question is asked.

|| Ourself, an evident impropriety of language, is peculiar to the regal style ; as, “ Be as ourself in Denmark.”

Personal pronouns have three cases, the Nominative, Possessive, and Objective. The nominative comes before the verb ; as, I speak ; the possessive signifies belonging to ; as, whose house is that ? 'Tis mine. The objective is governed by active verbs, and prepositions ; as, I taught him ; I arrived before him.

DECLENSION OF PRONOUNS.

Of the Personal, I, thou, he, she, it.

Nom. who		Nom. who
Poss. whose		Poss. whose
Obj. whom		Obj. whom

Note.—In grammatical construction all nouns and pronouns, generally speaking, are of the third person ; except, 1st, when an address is made to any one, for in this case the noun is of the second person ; and 2dly, such pronouns as have the first and second persons.

OF THE VERB.

A Verb expresses action, being, or suffering ; as, I write, I am, I endure hardships. Verbs are of four kinds ; Substantive, Active, Passive, and Neuter.

A substantive verb expresses being or existence ; as, I am.

A verb active, called also transitive, expresses an action, which implies an agent who acts, and an object acted upon ; as, "I esteem Thomas." In this sentence the pronoun I is the agent, esteem the verb, and Thomas the object acted upon.

A passive verb expresses suffering or receiving an action, and also implies an agent and an object acted upon, like the verb active, but with this essential difference,—that the object of a verb passive takes the lead in the sentence ; as, Thomas is esteemed by me.

A neuter verb expresses an action which either recurs to the agent, or which has no particular object implied ; as, I dream, he runs, they walk.

Verbs have Times or Tenses, Numbers, Persons, Modes, and Participles.

OF TIMES OR TENSES.

Though English verbs, of themselves, have but two tenses, the present and past (indefinite), as, love, loved,—and though there be only three general distinctions of time, present, past, and future, (the latter formed by the assistance of the auxiliary shall or will) ; yet in transitive and passive verbs, to express an action more definitely, Grammarians make use of nine tenses or times ; which are 1st, the present indefinite ; 2dly, the present imperfect ; 3d, the present perfect ; 4th, the past indefinite ; 5th, the past imperfect ; 6th, the past perfect ; 7th, the future indefinite ; 8th, the future imperfect ; and 9th, the future perfect ; and these times, except the present and past indefinite, are formed by the assistance of the auxiliary verbs, am, be, can, do, have, may, could, would, should, might, did, shall, and will.

OF NUMBER.

There are two numbers, the singular and plural.

OF PERSONS.

There are three persons in each mode ; 1st, 2d, and 3d.

OF MODE.

There are four modes ; the Indicative, Imperative, Conjunctive or Subjunctive, and Infinitive.

The indicative affirms or declares ; as, I teach ; or asks a question ; as, Is he come ?

The imperative commands or exhorts ; as, Do that ; pray come hither.

The conjunctive expresses a doubt, condition, or contingence ; as, I could do it, if he were willing.

The infinitive merely expresses the action, without any regard to time, number, or person ; as, To write well is commendable.

OF THE PARTICIPLE.

There are two participles derived from a verb, the present and past ; the former is called the Active, and the latter the Passive participle.

The present participle is formed of the verb, by adding ing, if the verb end with a consonant ; as, present, presenting ;—or by annexing ng only, if it end in e, as, love, loving :—and the past participle is made by adding ed or d only, according to the former remark ; as, present, presented ; love, loved.

Participles which have no relation to time, are absolutely adjectives ; as, a loving father, a beloved son.

Verbs of one syllable ending with a single consonant, preceded by a single vowel, and also those of two or more syllables, having the accent on the last syllable, double the final consonant of the verb in the present participle, and likewise in every other part of the verb in which a syllable is added ; as, set, setting, setteth ; befit, befitting, befitteth.

* Written by contraction and general consent, couldest, shouldest, wouldest, in which words the l is not sounded.

OF IRREGULAR VERBS.

Irregular or anomalous verbs are such as do not form their past times active, and perfect participle, by the addition of d or ed to the verb.

Verbs ending in ch, ck, p, x, ll, ss, not only change ed into t, in the past time active, and perfect participle, but also drop one of the double letters; as, dwelt, mixt, past, snapt, for dwelled, mixed, passed, snapped. And those which terminate in l, m, n, p, after a diphthong, shorten the diphthong, or change it into a single short vowel; as, deal, dealt; dream, dreamt; mean, meant; feel, felt; sleep, slept, &c.—and others change the termination ve into f; as, leave, left; bereave, bereft, &c.

OF THE ADVERB.

An * Adverb is joined to a verb to denote the circumstance of a quality or action. Adverbs admit of no variation whatever, except some few which have the degrees of comparison; as, well, better, best; often, oftener, oftenest; soon, sooner, soonest.

The principal adverbs are those of order, time, place, quantity, quality, manner, affirmation, negation, doubting, interrogation, and comparison. Many are formed from adjectives, by adding ly; as, like, likely; sincere, sincerely; wise, wisely, &c.

* An adverb may be known from an adjective, by this rule: place a substantive after it, and it will make nonsense; but if you join an adverb to an adjective or to a verb, it will make good sense.

OF THE CONJUNCTION.

A Conjunction, which is indeclinable, joins words and sentences together.

Conjunctions, however, have sometimes a government of modes. Some require the indicative, and some the conjunctive after them. If, though, unless, except, lest, whether, that,—when they express doubt, condition, &c. govern the conjunctive mode;—but when they imply nothing contingent or uncertain, govern the indicative.

There are several kinds or classes of conjunctions; such as, adversative, causal, conclusive, conditional, copulative, comparative, disjunctive, dubitative, and conjunctive.

Some are used distributively or in pairs; as,

Whether, or: “Whether did you ride or walk?”

Neither, nor: “Neither your love nor hatred affects me.”

Either, or: “Either you or he shall do it.”

Though, yet, or nevertheless: “Though you say it, yet I will not believe it.”

As, as: “As white as snow.”

So, as: “He is not so tall as you.”

So, that: “His rules are so dark that I cannot comprehend them.”

OF THE PREPOSITION.

Prepositions are put before nouns and pronouns to express the relation or connection between different words. They always govern the noun or pronoun in the objective case.

Prepositions are of two sorts, separable, and inseparable.

The separable are above, about, after, against, among, amongst, at, before, behind, beneath, below, between, betwixt, beyond, beside, by, concerning, for, from, in, into, out, out of, on, over, till, to, through, until, unto, upon, under, with, within, without.

The inseparable, or such as constitute parts of words, are; a, ab, abs, ad, ana, ante, anti, amphi, be, circum, co, con, contra, counter, de, dis, e, ex, en, enter, extra, in, inter, intro, meta, mis, over, out, for, fore, op, per, post, pre, pro, preter, peri, re, retro, se, sub, subter, super, syn, trans, un, up, and with.

Prepositions frequently change their final consonant into the consonant, with which the word begins; as, conmaterial for commaterial, &c. &c.

OF THE INTERJECTION.

An Interjection expresses some sudden emotion of the mind; such as, joy, grief, wonder, praise, contempt, surprise, mirth, incitement to attention, desire of silence, languor, deliberation, pain, exultation, salutation, &c. &c.

Substantives and adjectives are not infrequently used for interjections; as, O shame! O sad!

PART III.

OF SYNTAX.

Syntax is the due construction or connection of the words of a language, into sentences or phrases.

A sentence is a period or set of words, comprehending some perfect sense or sentiment of the mind; and may be either simple or compound.

A Simple Sentence consists, at least, of a noun and a verb; as, I write.

A Compound Sentence, is when two or more sentences are joined together; as, “The providence of God is over all his works; he ruleth and directeth with infinite wisdom.”

There are two kinds of syntax; the one of concord, wherein the words are to agree in gender, number, person, and case; the other of regimen or government, wherein one word governs another, and occasions some variation therein.

The following general rules, with the notes under each, comprehend whatever is necessary for the true writing or speaking of the English language.

RULE I. A verb must agree * with its agent or nominative †, in number and person: as, "I instruct, they learn, he plays, thou art diligent."

RULE II. Adjectives ‡, in English, having no variation of gender, number, &c. cannot but agree with their substantives in these respects: except some of the adjective § pronouns, which must agree in number with their substantives; as, this book, those books.

RULE III. The relative || must agree with its antecedent, in gender, number, person ¶, and case; as, "happy is the man who hath sown in his breast the seeds of benevolence."

RULE IV. A verb active or transitive, governs the noun or pronoun which follows it in the objective case; as, "John loves me, and I esteem him. Thomas beat William; that is, him."

RULE V. The substantive verb to be, governs a nominative after it; as, I am he; except when it is in the infinitive mode; as, I took it to be him.

RULE VI. The present  participle governs the same case after it, as the verb from which it is derived; as, love your enemies; for in loving them, you fulfil the law.

RULE VII. When two substantives †† come together, which belong to one another, the thing to which the other belongs, is placed first, in the possessive case; as, The king's troops: or else last, by a circumlocution, with the preposition of before it; as, The troops of the king.

RULE VIII. The present ‡‡ participle, having the definite article the before it, becomes a substantive, and governs the preposition of after it; as, The loving of your enemies is the command of God.

RULE IX. When one verb immediately follows or depends upon another, the latter is put in the infinitive mode, with the preposition to before it; as, Good boys love to learn: except the following verbs, which have others after them, without the sign to: bid, dare, feel, hear, let, make, must, need, see, and sometimes have, not used as an auxiliary; as, I bade him come; he dares not do it; I feel it run; we heard him come; you let him fall; they will have him come; I made him hear me; you must not do it; they need not go; I saw him enter.

* A verb may be put, either in the singular or plural number, to a noun of multitude; as, The public is, or are displeased.

Every verb, except in the infinitive mode, has a nominative expressed or understood; as, Speak now or never, that is, speak ye, &c.

† To find the nominative to a verb, ask the question, Who is? Who does? Who suffers? What is? What does? What suffers? and the word which answers to the question is the nominative to the verb.

Every nominative case, except the case absolute, and when an address is made to a person, belongs to some verb, either expressed or understood; as, To whom thus Eve, yet sinless; that is, to whom thus Eve said, &c.

‡ Every adjective relates to some substantive, either expressed or implied; as, The great, the wise, the chosen; that is, persons.

§ Each, every, either, agree with the nouns and verbs of the singular number only.

|| The relative is often omitted; as, the book (which) I read.

¶ Every relative has an antecedent to which it refers, either expressed or understood, and with which it agrees in person; as, who injures me shall be punished; that is, the man who, &c.

¶¶ Personal pronouns, as they relate to substantives, and by some grammarians called, not improperly, relatives, are included under this rule.

 Verbs ending with a single consonant, preceded by a single vowel, and those of two or more syllables, having the accent upon the last syllable, double the final consonant of the verb in the present participle, and in every other part of the verb, in which a syllable is added; as, shat, shutting, shutteth; beset, besetting, besetteth.

†† A substantive put before another substantive, becomes an adjective; as, lime-water, sea-fish. Two substances joined together, signifying the same thing, are put in the same case, in apposition to each other; as, King George.

Every possessive case supposes some nominative to which it belongs; as, St. Paul's, that is, St. Paul's Church.

‡‡ Participles having no relation to time, become really adjectives, and admit of the degrees of comparison; as, a learned man, a more loving father, the most loving boy.

RULE X. Prepositions * always govern the objective case after them ; as, He did it for William, i. e. for him : take it from her, and give it to him.

RULE XI. Two † or more nouns of the singular number, joined together by a conjunction copulative, require verbs, nouns, and pronouns of the plural number ; as, Greatness and goodness are seldom companions.

RULE XII. The relative ‡ is the nominative to the verb, when no other nominative comes between it and the verb ; as, the man who writes.

RULE XIII. When there is a nominative case between the relative and the verb, the relative must be put in that case which the verb, or the noun following, or the preposition going before it, used to govern ; as, the man whom I esteem ; he whose bounty relieved me ; the man to whom you spoke.

RULE XIV. When the relative § comes after two words of different § persons, it may agree in person with either ; as, I am the man who command you : or, I am the man who commands you.

RULE XV. Conjunctions || copulate like cases, and the same mood and time of verbs ; as, I saw him and her together ; and they were talking of me.

RULE XVI. The infinitive ¶ mode frequently does the office of a substantive ; as, 1st, In the nominative, To walk is healthful : 2dly, In the objective ; as, Boys love to play.

RULE XVII. If a question be asked, the nominative is placed after the principal verb, or after the auxiliary ; as, Was it he ? Did he write ?

RULE XVIII. In an imperative affirmative sentence, when a thing is commanded to be, to do, or to suffer, the nominative case follows the auxiliary ; as, go, thou traitor : or the auxiliary let, with the objective case after it, is used ; as, let him submit ; let them be punished.

But in a negative  imperative, interrogative, or explicative sentence, the adverbs †† not, there, must be placed in the following manner : Go not ; do not go ; there was not a man ; was there not a man ? do you believe it ? do not you believe it ? don't you believe it ?

OF PUNCTUATION.

Punctuation is the art of pointing, or of dividing a discourse into periods by points, expressing the pauses to be made in the reading thereof, and regulating the cadence or elevation of the voice.

* The prepositions to and for, are often understood, chiefly before the pronouns ; as, give me ; that is, to me : procure me a pen ; that is, for me.

Also in or on before nouns expressing time ; as, this morning ; that is, on this morning ; last week ; that is, in the last week.

The preposition is often inelegantly separated from the relative ; as, whom will you give it to ? more properly, to whom will you give it ?

† Note 1st, In sentences like the following, the verb is put in the singular number, and agrees with each of the foregoing substantives ; as, " Pain, and want, and even death itself, is easier to bear, than private stabs given to one's reputation." 2dly, When the singular numbers joined together are of several persons, in making the plural pronoun agree with them in person, the second person takes place of the third, and the first of both : as, " He and you and I are to blame : you and he concerted the plot."

‡ Every relative has an antecedent to which it refers, either expressed or understood ; as, who loves me, loves my dog ; that is, the man who, &c. But, note, it is often omitted ; as, the reason I rely upon ; that is, which I rely upon.

§ Note, When the person of the relative is fixed, it should be continued through the whole sentence ; as, I esteem you, who love and give me good counsel ; not, who love and givest me good counsel.

|| The conjunction that, is often omitted and understood : See (that) thou tell no man.

When it expresses the end or motive, it governs the verb in the conjunctive mode. In comparing the qualities of things, the latter noun following than, or as, is not governed by either of the conjunctions, but agrees with, or is governed by, the verb, or the preposition expressed or understood ; as, he is wiser (than) you are ; I am as tall as he (is).

¶ It likewise frequently stands absolute, or independent of the rest of the sentence ; as, to confess the truth, I was in fault ; that is, that I may confess, &c.

 Two negatives destroy each other, or are equal to an affirmative ; as, I will not have none, is as much as to say, I will have some.

†† The adverbs, when, while, after, &c. being left out, the phrase is formed with the participle independently of the rest of the sentence, and is called the case absolute : as, he coming in, I went away ; that is, when he came in, I went away.

The six following are the principal stops * or pauses * in a sentence ; viz. the comma (,) the semicolon (;) the colon (:) the period or full point (.) the note of admiration (!) and the note of interrogation (?)

1. The comma † (,) is a pause in reading till you may tell one, and is mostly used to distinguish Nouns, Verbs, Adjectives, and Adverbs ; as, “ It is very difficult to make fine pictures, handsome statues, good music, good verses.”

2. It likewise prevents ambiguity in the sense ; as, “ Epistolary writing, by which a great part of the commerce of human life is carried on, was esteemed by the Romans a liberal and polite accomplishment.”

3. When an address is made to a person, answering to the vocative case in Latin, a comma is placed before and after the noun : as, “ Commune with thyself, O man, and consider wherefore thou wast made.”

The semicolon ‡, (;) a pause double in duration of the comma, is used to distinguish the different members or parts of a sentence : as, “ A vain hope flattereth the heart of a fool ; but he who is wise pursueth it not. Be grateful to thy father, for he gave thee life ; and to thy mother, for she sustained thee.”

The colon ||, (:) a pause triple in duration of the comma, shews the preceding sentence to be perfect and entire, only that some remark, farther illustration, or other matter connected therewith, is subjoined : as, “ He who giveth away his treasure wisely, giveth away his plagues : he who retaineth its increase, heapeth up sorrow.”

When an example or speech is introduced, and particularly before things compared or contrasted, the colon is used : as, “ Poorness of spirit will actuate revenge ; greatness of soul despiseth it : Nay, it doeth good unto him who intended to have disturbed it.—As the tulip, which is gaudy without smell, conspicuous without use : so is the man who setteth himself up on high, having no merit.”

The period or full point, (.) a pause quadruple in duration of the comma, and the longest pause, denotes a full and perfect sentence, which is always distinguished by this point : as, “ A noble spirit disdaineth the malice of fortune : his greatness of soul is not to be cast down.”

The note of admiration ¶, (!) is used to express wonder, or exclamation : as, “ Who art thou, O man ! who presumest on thine own wisdom ?”

The note of interrogation § (?), is used to shew when a question is asked : as, “ What day of the month is this ?” It likewise distinguishes a real question from a sentence in the imperative mode : as, “ Do you hear me ?”

Besides the above points, there are other marks made use of in books and writings as References, or to point out something remarkable or defective : as,

1. Accent (' or ') placed after a vowel, or the last consonant of a syllable, shews the stress of the voice in pronouncing a word to be on that syllable immediately before which it is placed.

2. Apostrophe (') is a comma put at the top of a word, to denote the omission of a letter, for the sake of a quicker pronunciation : as, plac'd for placed, ne'er for never,

* The modulation of the voice, in reading, is effected by these points, demanding a cadence or elevation, in correspondence with the sense.

† In reading prose, or verse, the voice must be almost always elevated at a comma.

‡ In comparative and subjunctive sentences (the latter being introduced by the adverb when), whether the members be separated by a semicolon, or colon, the voice must be elevated as at a comma.

In other cases, the semicolon very often demands a depression or cadence of the voice.

|| The colon, except in comparative sentences, generally requires a full cadence of the voice, equal to that of the period.

¶ The note of admiration requires sometimes an elevation, and sometimes a depression of the voice.

§ Interrogative sentences require an elevation of the voice, except the question be asked by the pronouns who, which, what ; or the adverbs how, how much, how many, where, when, &c. for, in these cases, you must give a moderate cadence to your voice, and let the pause be governed by the sense of the subject.

3. Asterism, or asterisk (*) a star; and parallel (||) direct to some note at the foot of the page.

4. Obelisk or dagger (†) refers likewise to some note in the margin, &c.; and in dictionaries, it commonly shews the word to be obsolete.

5. The Index or Hand (☞) points to some very remarkable passage.

6. Breve (˘) over a vowel, denotes that it sounds short.

7. Circumflex (ˆ) is placed over a vowel, to denote a long syllable: as, Euphrates.

8. Diæresis, (¨) two points placed over two vowels in a word, parting them into two syllables.

9. Hyphen (-) a short line, to join syllables or words together.

10. Parenthesis*, marked thus, () serves to include a sentence which might be left out, without any prejudice to the sense of the sentence; notwithstanding it is necessary for the explanation thereof: as, "Pardon me, (added she, embracing me), I now believe what you say."

11. Bracket or Crotchet, thus, [] includes such a word from the sentence as serves to explain the word immediately preceding: as, "A treatise of [concerning] English Grammar."

12. Paragraph (§) denotes the beginning of a new subject. The pause here may be greater than at a period.

13. Section (§) is used to divide a chapter into less particular arguments.

14. Ellipsis, marked thus, (—or—) denotes that part of a word is left out: as, K—g for King.

15. Caret (ˆ) is placed underneath a line, to shew that some letter, word, or sentence, is left out by mistake; and must be taken in exactly in that place.

16. Quotation (") is a double comma reversed at the beginning of a line, which shews that a passage is quoted or transcribed from some Author in his own words.

PART IV.

OF PROSODY.

Prosody comprises orthoepy, or a due pronunciation of words; and orthometry, or the art of composing verse.

OF DUE PRONUNCIATION.

By due pronunciation is meant that of giving every letter its proper sound and power, and every syllable its proper accent.

By accent is to be understood a stress of the voice laid on the proper syllable of a word, according to its quantity, long or short, without lengthening or shortening the syllable.

By quantity is meant the time in which a syllable is pronounced; and the proportion between a long and a short one, is as two to one: hence accent and quantity are two distinct things.

* The parenthesis requires a pause equal in duration of a semicolon; and the words contained therein must be pronounced in a lower tone than the foregoing part of the sentence; at the end of which, the voice should be elevated as at a comma, and the following part of the sentence begun in the same tone as the former.

It is impossible to define the precise quantity or duration of the foregoing pauses, as a discourse may be read in a quicker or slower time: nor has any one ever attempted to lay down certain rules for placing a just cadence in speaking or reading. He who would learn to read properly, must attend carefully to those who are celebrated for reading and speaking well. If he have a good ear to music, there is no doubt but he will be master of it in a reasonable time.

Of VOWELS constituting long and short syllables, and of proper Accent.

The variety of long and short sounds of the vowels, diphthongs, and triphthongs, have been scrupulously analysed, and accurately exemplified throughout the whole of this dictionary ; and as no general rules can be given for the right placing of accent without being subject to numerous exceptions, recourse, in this respect, must be had to the words themselves, which have been accented with due care ; neither have we omitted to notice such words as are differently pronounced by the best orators.

OF VERSIFICATION.

Versification, or the art or practice of making verse, is the harmonic arrangement of a certain number of syllables, according to laws and maxims established in that language, which consists of a due and pleasing variety of long and short, of accented and unaccented syllables.

Without running into the nice distinctions of the Latin and Greek poetry, English composition may be reduced to three feet, the Iambic, Trochaic, and the Anapæstic.

The Iambic consists of two syllables with an accent on the last ; as, appear', aloft', resist', create'.

Our Iambic measure comprises verses of four syllables.

Most good, most fair,
Or things as rare,
To call you's lost :
For all the cost
Words can bestow,
So poorly shew
Upon your praise,
That all the ways
Sense hath, come short.
With ravish'd ears
The monarch hears.

Drayton.

Dryden.

Of six.

This while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre ?
Shall we not sing an ode ?
Shall all that holy fire,
In us that strongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire ?

Though in the utmost Peak
A while we do remain,
Amongst the mountains bleak,
Expos'd to sleet and rain,
No sport our hours shall break,
To exercise our vein.

What though bright Phœbus' beams
Refresh the southern ground,
And though the princely Thames
With beauteous nymphs abound,
And by old Camber's streams
Be many wonders found ;
Yet many rivers clear
Here glide in silver swathes,

And what of all most dear,
 Buxton's delicious baths,
 Strong ale and noble cheer,
 T'assuage breem winter's scathes,
 In places far or near,
 Or famous or obscure,
 Where wholesome is the air,
 Or where the most impure,
 All times and ev'ry where,
 The muse is still in ure.

Drayton.

Of eight, which is the usual measure of short poems.

And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown, and mossy cell,
 Where I may sit and nightly spell
 Of ev'ry star the sky doth shew,
 And ev'ry herb that sips the dew.

Milton.

The spacious firmament on high,
 With all the blue ethereal sky,
 And spangled heav'ns, a shining frame,
 Their great original proclaim.

Addison.

In reason's ear they all rejoice,
 And utter forth a glorious voice ;
 For ever singing as they shine,
 The hand that made us is divine.

Addison.

Of ten, which is the common measure of heroic and tragic poetry. To constitute the pure Iambic the even syllables must all have a peculiar distinction; they must be accented, or they must be monosyllables, or, if neither, they must at least be distinctly heard in the pronunciation.

What next I bring, shall please thee, be assur'd,
 Thy likeness, thy fit help, thy other self,
 Thy wish exactly to thy heart's desire.

Milton.

Thou most indulgent, most tremendous power,
 Still more tremendous for thy wond'rous love.

Young.

Come, gentle spring, ethereal mildness, come.

Thomson.

Full in the midst of this created space,
 Betwixt heav'n, earth, and skies, there stands a place
 Confining on all three, with triple bound ;
 Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
 And thither bring their undulating sound.

The palace of loud Fame, her seat of pow'r,
 Plac'd on the summit of a lofty tow'r ;

A thousand winding entries long and wide
 Receive of fresh reports a flowing tide.

A thousand crannies in the walls are made ;
 Nor gate nor bars exclude the busy trade.

'Tis built of brass, the better to diffuse
 The spreading sounds, and multiply the news ;

Where echoes in repeated echoes play :
 A mart for ever full, and open night and day.

Nor silence is within, nor voice express,

But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease ;

Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow roar
 Of tides, receding from th'insulted shore :
 Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,
 When Jove to distance drives the rolling war.
 The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
 Of crowds, or issuing forth, or entering in :
 A thoroughfare of news ; where some devise
 Things never heard, some mingle truth with lies :
 The troubled air with empty sounds they beat,
 Intent to hear, and eager to repeat. Dryden.

In these measures, as before observed, the accents are to be placed on even syllables ; and every line considered by itself is more harmonious as this rule is more strictly observed. The variations necessary to pleasure belong to the art of poetry, not to the rules of grammar.

Our Trochaic measures, which have the accent on the odd syllables.

Of three syllables.

Here we may Think and pray
 Before death
 Stops our breath :
 Other joys
 Are but toys. Walton's Angler.

Of five.

In the days of old,
 Stories plainly told,
 Lovers felt annoy. Old Ballad.

Of seven.

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
 Urge not thus your haughty birth. Waller.

These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest those of seven, eight, and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote verses sometimes of twelve syllables, as Drayton's Polyolbion.

Of all the Cambrian shires their heads that bear so high,
 And farth'st survey their soils with an ambitious eye,
 Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchless crowds,
 The nearest that are said to kiss the wand'ring clouds,
 Especial audience craves, offended with the throng,
 That she of all the rest neglected was so long ;
 Alleging for herself, when through the Saxon's pride,
 The godlike race of Brute to Severn's setting side
 Were cruelly enforc'd, her mountains did relieve
 Those whom devouring war else ev'ry where did grieve.
 And when all Wales beside (by fortune or by might)
 Unto her ancient foe resign'd her ancient right,
 A constant maiden still she only did remain,
 The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain.
 And as each one is prais'd for her peculiar things,
 So only she is rich in mountains, meres, and springs ;
 And holds herself as great in her superfluous waste,
 As others by their towns and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.

And as the mind of such a man, that hath a long way gone,
And either knoweth not his way, or else would let alone
His purpos'd journey, is distract.

The measures of twelve and fourteen syllables were often mingled by our old poets, sometimes in alternate lines, and sometimes in alternate couplets.

The verse of twelve syllables, called an Alexandrine, is now only used to diversify heroic lines.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varied verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine. } Pope.

The pause in the Alexandrine must be at the sixth syllable.

The verse of fourteen syllables is now broken into a soft lyric measure of verses, consisting alternately of eight syllables and six.

She to receive thy radiant name,
Selects a whiter space, } Fenton.

When all shall praise, and ev'ry lay
Devote a wreath to thee,
That day, for come it will, that day
Shall I lament to see. } Lewis to Pope.

Beneath this stone an infant lies
To earth whose body lent,
Hereafter shall most glorious rise,
But not more innocent.

When the Archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall wish their lives below
Had been as short as thine! } Wesley.

We have another measure very quick and lively, and therefore much used in songs, which may be called the Anapæstic, in which the accent rests upon every third syllable.

May I govern my passion with absolute sway,
And grow wiser and better as life wears away. } Dr. Pope.

In this measure a syllable is often retrenched from the first foot, as,

Diógenes súrly and pród. } Dr. Pope.

When présent we love, and when ábsent agréé,
I think not of I'ris, nor I'ris of mé. } Dryden.

These measures are varied by many combinations, and sometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in heroic measure.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us,
'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. } Addison.

In that of seven syllables.

They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded. } Prior.

In that of eight syllables.

For resistance I could fear none.
But with twenty ships had done one.
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Hast atchiev'd with six alone.

In that of six.

'Twas when the seas were roaring,
With hollow blasts of wind,
A damsel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd.

Gay.

In the anapestic.

When terrible tempests assail us,
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor power, nor wealth can avail us,
But skilful industry steers right. Ballad.

To these measures, and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse.

Our versification admits of few licences, except a synalepha, or elision of e in the before a vowel, as th'eternal; and more rarely of o in to, as t'accept; and a synæresis, by which two short vowels coalesce into one syllable, as question, special; or a word is contracted by the expulsion of a short vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temp'rance.

To the foregoing measures, and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse. It may, however, be requisite to observe, that what we call accent does by no means correspond with what the ancients call quantity, though it is arbitrarily employed to signify the same thing.

There are few verses in which the laws of prosody do not clash with the language in point of oratorical accent: the following, though not quite exempt, may be called an exception.

As | mūsing ĩ | rāng'd ĩn thē | mēads āll ā | lōne,
Ā | beaūtīfūl | crēatūre wās | māking hēr mōan;
Thē | tēars thēy wēre | fālling full | fāst frōm hēr | ēyes,
Shē | pīercēd thē | āir ānd mý | hēart with hēr | cries.

Mr. Sheridan says, "That when the art of reading with propriety shall have been established, and produced its effects, a new field will be open to our writers, both in poetry and prose, which will display, in a new light, the vast compass of our language, in point of harmony and expression, from the same causes which produced similar effects at Rome, in the writers of the Ciceronian or Augustan age."

That our language is capable of great improvement with respect to prosody, is apparent: for, by inspection into our English verse, we shall find, that syllables which are naturally long and emphatical, are frequently made short; and those which are short substituted for long syllables.

By this indiscriminate use of accent and long quantity, allowing strength to supply the place of length, the harmony of verse is marred, which, however, is by no means inconsistent with the rules of oratory. If our lexicographers and poets were universally to adopt a plurality of accent, and make the proper distinction between long and short syllables, as the Greeks did, by the right application of the grave or acute accent, it would tend to free our verse from this glaring absurdity.

This, I presume, must be the new light Mr. Sheridan hints at, with respect to harmony of verse, which I am confident might be so much improved, that the judicious, in their musical compositions, might assimilate to the perfection of rhetorical declamation.
